When Denmark found out that there was a presidential election in the US it was the main topic among the people. Everyone was keen on knowing the results. "Who was the new president of the US?" It was a popular topic because everyone was only talking about the presidential election.

The candidate that became more favored in Denmark was Joe Biden. Denmark already knew how Trump handled the job as president, how he was towards other countries and the decisions he took. Denmark was not happy with that so they wanted Joe Biden instead because they think that he is a little better than Trump - both politically and personally.

Danish opinions on the two candidates

President Trump, which is friendly towards Russia and harsh towards a number of other countries - including most in the EU, has a certain undiplomatic attitude which is often shown through his social media platforms.

If President Trump gets four more years in the White House, he will be convinced that the people liked his attitude and tone which affected his presidency. We can expect him to continue in the same way.

If Joe Biden wins the election, there will be a severe change in the tone towards the outside world. His diplomatic approach will in all likelihood be significantly different, and that is something that a number of world leaders will probably welcome. His politics and views on sustainable energy sources will also have an impact on the cooperation with Denmark.

Why is the USA's president election important in Denmark?

The US presidential election is not only important for Denmark but also for the other countries, because the president of the US is someone that has a lot of power. The USA has many agreements and tradings with Denmark and other countries, and the agreements can maybe be affected by the new United States president. Just like the Paris agreement which Trump decided to withdraw from, so many agreements can be cancelled and that can affect the cooperating countries. But it also depends on which person is going to be the United States' president, so that is why it is so important to Denmark.
